Hele Equine Hoof Cushions

A new European design of a wedge-shaped pad of compressed particles of highly-resilient black rubber. The pad can be slightly compressed, but retains its original shape for proper support.

The wedge shape elevates the heel to reduce tension by the deep digital flexor tendon on its coffin bone and allows the extensor tendon to help prevent the coffin bone from rotation. The pad supports the sole and frog without putting pressure on the laminae and hoof wall.

Equine laminitis is a fairly common, but serious equine malady. Acute laminitis is a medical emergency that should receive immediate corrective treatment to avoid long term complications. If possible, treatments should start before clinical signs development from such conditions as grain overload or a retained placenta.

Common laminitis treatments include:

- Removing the causative problem, if known.
- Cryotherapy: getting a constant 24/7 exposure to ice slurry or cold water to affected feet. Very labor intensive.
- NSAIDs such as Flunixin or Phenylbutazone.
- Mechanical support with two goals in mind: limiting rotation of the coffin bone by elevation of the heel and increasing patient comfort.
